ABSTRACT

The kid protection system is introduced in this article. Child welfare progresses via child safeguarding, child growth, child abuse prevention, and child security. Traumatized children and the difficulties they face are the focus of this article. Since kids are fighting for their survival, they still have questions. The internal and external causes of the problem had already been recognized by our nations, as had the organizational structure of public welfare organizations. They've figured out a lot of great ideas to improve kids' lives. They pushed for children's success in today's society through the organizations they founded.

KEYWORDS

Child protection, child development, child abuse, child welfare, child safeguarding.

INTRODUCTION

The world's future strength will come from its children. So, Education is Crucial for the Progress of a Country. Investing in a child's education pays dividends for the entire household. With the help of their education, this specific family may contribute to the betterment of society. Protecting children is a challenging responsibility. There are a lot of roadblocks in the way of finishing this. When it comes to the advancement of comprehensive child welfare initiatives, Tamil Nadu is at the forefront. The state government has launched several new programmes to improve women's and children's lives. These plans aren't only for their future prosperity; they're for their safety, as well.

PROGRESS IN THE WELL-BEING OF CHILDREN

Caring for the young people who will grow up to populate the world is important. The kids require a lot of help and care. The state is meeting these requirements by organization of several programmes. These programmes gave children's health, education, and development top importance. Institutional and non-institutional institutions and outreach programmes can help kids grow up safe and healthy. Children with exceptional needs, such as those attending special education programmes, are also a focus of child welfare. They are required to participate in a sports event at the state level to demonstrate their talents in various artistic and athletic pursuits. Reputable nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) get funding for operating specialized facilities for the mentally impaired. The state also provides for the well-being of abandoned and orphaned children by operating orphanages. Inmates receive free food, clothing, shelter, education, and medical treatment from these establishments. In addition, the government provides financial support to non-profit groups that care for and safeguard children. Orphanages also receive funding to help the children in their care.

PROGRAMMES FOR THE SAFETY AND WELL-BEING OF CHILDREN

The public should create awareness programmes. The effects on child safety will ripple throughout society. In areas where there is a lack of such a facility, many NGOs have opened adoption centers. Research has been done with the public to dispel myths, misinformation, and prejudices around adoption. Their mission is to ensure that non-governmental organizations (NGOs) providing care for children adhere to minimal service standards. To stop the exploitation and sale of children, 12,547 communities have formed child welfare committees. Children in foster care, group homes, and other residential settings should be given the same attention to hygiene as those in their families. The Child Welfare Council (CWC) was established to handle matters involving abused and abandoned kids. Additionally, a free kid helpline number (1098) is provided. It's being run in 10 different cities around the state to provide outreach services for kids.

The Government of India established the Central Social Welfare Board in August 1953. The purpose of this body was to advocate for and administer welfare programmes for disadvantaged people, particularly women, children, and older people. CSWB is implementing crucial programmes for a wide range of endeavors to meet the needs of women and children.

Care for and security of children is the focus of the Child Welfare Committee. CWC adopts kids and puts them in foster care if they don't have any other family to care for them. The kids are in good hands because of them. The state government creates and oversees these residences. You'll have a nice kitchen and living room if you care for your home. For kids in need, CWC offers the CHILDLINE service. Restoring a child is getting them back and protecting them as soon as possible. Planned and funded initiatives to enhance material, nutritional, educational, and other aspects of people's daily lives. Those responsible for the criminal behavior of a child should face jail time. Assault, inflicting pain on a kid, employing children in beggary, or exploitation are all forms of this crime. This law allows for the monitoring and social auditing of youngsters. Juvenile courts, set up in each municipality, conduct these reviews.

CHILDREN'S LEARNING

The social and political process that keeps children from receiving a good education is multifaceted and difficult to solve. There are kids out there that have never been to school and probably never will. Some kids start elementary school and are technically enrolled but are "at risk" of dropping out due to factors like poor attendance or academic performance or the simple fact that they aren't being taught anything useful. These kids need to be looked after, and they need to go to school. Promoting family planning and raising awareness about the issue of female infanticide will help elevate girls out of poverty and reduce the practice. Equal educational opportunities for girls and boys are promoted. The government has instituted the Ninaivu girl child protection system, known as the "Sivagami Ammaiyaar" programmes, which offers an upfront deposit of Rs.22,200 for one girl child. Through the Power Finance and Infrastructure Development Corporation Limited, the government deposited two young ladies' college funds totaling Rs.15,200. This sum, plus interest, will be awarded to a girl student taking the public examination for the tenth grade.

STOPPING THE TORTURE OF CHILDREN

The most crucial aspect of child welfare in contemporary society is child abuse prevention. Teaching kids how to read body language and identify appropriate and inappropriate touches is important. Their elders should talk to them about a wide range of topics. All of these measures will protect kids from being mistreated. The kids need to step up from mistreatment that stems from their professional and financial circumstances. When female children are sold as commodities, they often lose access to necessities like food and shelter, important social networks, parental guidance, and opportunities for growth and development. Some places and organizations work to keep kids safe from harm. They provide ways to stop child abuse from happening. Girls in elementary school have it rough. They face challenges such as abuse at home, dependency on drugs or alcohol, health problems, exploitation, poverty, and more. Two forms of safety are related to caring for children. One is essential services like healthcare, education, public assistance, etc. Secondary supports, such as help from friends, family, neighbors, and the community, are another option. Over-reliance on tertiary resources or casual relationships requires more resources.

A BASIC DEMAND OF HUMANITY

In addition to being a basic human right, education is crucial in fostering social and economic progress. Protecting children from exploitation, dangerous work, sexual exploitation, abuse, and violence is one of the essential rights outlined for children in the Convention on the Rights of the Child of 1989. The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) uses "child protection" to describe its mission to safeguard children from harm.

RECOMMENDATION

The tools of education have greatly aided the fight for children's freedom. It would be a shame for the world if they became jobless. The kids are showing signs of ob-impediments to their progress. They often need more proper tools for the job. They had previously shown no interest in taking part in the economics sector. They need to be given a chance to succeed academically. The goal is to pique the child's attention and encourage them to participate in the activity. It enhances their skills, and they demonstrate those skills by contributing to society.

CONCLUSION

When a child is born, he or she has many hopes and dreams. Regardless of their socioeconomic background, all children deserve access to quality education. Children need to be protected; Women today encounter numerous challenges in society. Children and women in need to be protected first and foremost. They could have succeeded in life if they were given a good education. They have the potential to improve society. We remember that the fate of our planet rests in their hands. They need to be risk- and hassle-free.
